Subject: Microsoft Settlement

As a consumer and engineer who has worked in the computer industry for over 35 years, I support and encourage Microsoft to continue innovating in the world of high tech. As a consumer, I am delighted with the price, performance, and ease of use they provide with their software. This is particularly the case when comparing their current offerings to those available ten years ago and earlier.

My understanding is that DOJ's antitrust responsibilities are to protect the consumer. I, and nearly every user of Microsoft products I have ever spoken with are delighted with their products. I don't believe it is DOJ's responsibilities to level the competitive playing field nor do I buy the allegations that Microsoft's practices have stifled competition at the expense of the consumer.

I believe the DOJ's current proposed remedies are more than adequate to punish Microsoft for their intense competitive practices and would like to see an end put to all the "lawyering" particularly by many of the state attorney generals.

Sincerely,

Tony Domit
